LITERARY FOCUS: NARRATOR

A narrator is a person who tells a story. A story's narrator may be a character in the story. Another type of narrator is outside the story and observes and reports on the action that takes place. We rely on a story's narrator to let us know what is going on. But what if the narrator can’t be trusted? As you read “The Tell-Tale Heart,” decide whether or not its narrator is truthful—or even sane.

IRONY: THE UNEXPECTED

Irony is a contrast between expectation and reality. Much of the horror in “The Tell-Tale Heart” comes from Poe’s use of irony. Look for these three basic kinds of irony as you read the story:

• Verbal irony What is said is the opposite of what is meant.

• Situational irony What happens is different from or even opposite of what we expected.

• Dramatic irony We know something a character doesn’t know.

READING SKILLS: PREVIEWING

When you preview a selection, you look it over to see what lies ahead. You might scan the title and skim a paragraph or two to get an idea of the writer’s subject and style. Preview Poe’s story. What predictions can you make?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>My Predictions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Literary Skills

Understand narrator; understand irony.

Reading Skills

Preview the story.

Vocabulary Skills

Identify synonyms.
VOCABULARY DEVELOPMENT

PREVIEW SELECTION VOCABULARY

Become familiar with these words before you read “The Tell-Tale Heart.”

acute (ə-kyōōt′) adj.: sharp.
   His nervousness increased his acute sense of hearing.

vexed (vekst) v.: disturbed.
   He was vexed by the old man’s eye.

sagacity (sā-gas′ə-tē) n.: intelligence and good judgment.
   He was proud of his powers and of his sagacity.

refrained (ri-frānd′) v.: held back.
   Though furious, he refrained from action.

wary (wer′e) adj.: cautious.
   He was too wary to make a careless mistake.

suavity (swäv′ə-tē) n.: smooth manner; smoothness.
   The police showed perfect suavity.

audacity (ō-das′ə-tē) n.: boldness.
   He was impressed with his own audacity.

vehemently (ve′ə-mant-lē) adv.: forcefully.
   He talked more vehemently, but he couldn’t drown out the sound.

gesticulations (jes-tik′yō-lə-shənz) n.: energetic gestures.
   His violent gesticulations did not disturb the police officers.

derision (di-rizh′ən) n.: ridicule.
   He hated the smiling derision of the police.

CLARIFYING WORD MEANINGS: SYNONYMS

A synonym is a word that has the same or nearly the same meaning as another word. When you learn a new word, take note of its synonyms. Knowing its synonyms will help you remember the new word’s meaning.

In the sentences below, a synonym is provided in parentheses for each boldface vocabulary word.

- “Above all was the sense of hearing acute (sharp).”
- “It was not the old man who vexed (annoyed) me, but his Evil Eye.”
- “I had been too wary (cautious) for that.”
- “I talked more quickly—more vehemently (forcefully); but the noise steadily increased.”
- “Anything was more tolerable than this derision (ridicule)!”
True!—nervous—very, very dreadfully nervous I had been and am; but why will you say that I am mad? The disease had sharpened my senses—not destroyed—not dulled them. Above all was the sense of hearing acute. I heard all things in the heaven and in the earth. I heard many things in hell. How, then, am I mad? Hearken! and observe how healthily—how calmly I can tell you the whole story.

It is impossible to say how first the idea entered my brain; but once conceived, it haunted me day and night. Object there was none. Passion there was none. I loved the old man. He had never wronged me. He had never given me insult. For his gold I had no desire. I think it was his eye! Yes, it was this! One of his eyes resembled that of a

---

1. object (äb’jikt) n.: purpose or goal.
vulture—a pale blue eye, with a film over it. Whenever it fell upon me, my blood ran cold; and so by degrees—very gradually—I made up my mind to take the life of the old man and thus rid myself of the eye forever.

Now this is the point. You fancy me mad. Madmen know nothing. But you should have seen me. You should have seen how wisely I proceeded—with what caution—with what foresight—with what dissimulation² I went to work! I was never kinder to the old man than during the whole week before I killed him. And every night, about midnight, I turned the latch of his door and opened it—oh, so gently! And then, when I had made an opening sufficient for my head, I put in a dark lantern, all closed, closed, so that no light shone out, and then I thrust in my head. Oh, you would have laughed to see how cunningly I thrust it in! I moved it slowly—very, very slowly, so that I might not disturb the old man’s sleep. It took me an hour to place my whole head within the opening so far that I could see him as he lay upon his bed. Ha! Would a madman have been so wise as this? And then, when my head was well in the room, I undid the lantern cautiously—oh, so cautiously—cautiously (for the hinges creaked)—I undid it just so much that a single thin ray fell upon the vulture eye. And this I did for seven long nights—every night just at midnight—but I found the eye always closed; and so it was impossible to do the work; for it was not the old man who vexed me, but his Evil Eye. And every morning, when the day broke, I went boldly into the chamber and spoke courageously to him, calling him by name in a hearty tone and inquiring how he had passed the night. So you see he would have been a very profound³ old man, indeed, to

². dissimulation (di-sim’yō-lā’shan) n.: disguising of intentions or feelings. (Look for a similar word at the end of the story.)
³. profound (prō-found’) adj.: deeply intellectual.
suspect that every night, just at twelve, I looked in upon him while he slept.

Upon the eighth night I was more than usually cautious in opening the door. A watch’s minute hand moves more quickly than did mine. Never before that night had I felt the extent of my own powers—of my sagacity. I could scarcely contain my feelings of triumph. To think that there I was, opening the door, little by little, and he not even to dream of my secret deeds or thoughts. I fairly chuckled at the idea; and perhaps he heard me; for he moved on the bed suddenly,
as if startled. Now you may think that I drew back—but no.
His room was as black as pitch with the thick darkness (for the shutters were close fastened, through fear of robbers), and so I knew that he could not see the opening of the door, and I kept pushing it on steadily, steadily.

I had my head in, and was about to open the lantern, when my thumb slipped upon the tin fastening, and the old man sprang up in the bed, crying out—“Who’s there?”

I kept quite still and said nothing. For a whole hour I did not move a muscle, and in the meantime I did not hear him lie down. He was still sitting up in the bed listening—just as I have done, night after night, hearkening to the deathwatches in the wall.

Presently I heard a slight groan, and I knew it was the groan of mortal terror. It was not a groan of pain or of grief—oh, no!—it was the low, stifled sound that arises from the bottom of the soul when overcharged with awe. I knew the sound well. Many a night, just at midnight, when all the world slept, it has welled up from my own bosom, deepening, with its dreadful echo, the terrors that distracted me. I say I knew it well. I knew what the old man felt, and pitted him, although I chuckled at heart. I knew that he had

4. deathwatches n.: beetles that burrow into wood and make tapping sounds, which some people believe are a sign of approaching death.
been lying awake ever since the first slight noise, when he had turned in the bed. His fears had been ever since growing upon him. He had been trying to fancy them causeless but could not. He had been saying to himself—“It is nothing but the wind in the chimney—it is only a mouse crossing the floor,” or “It is merely a cricket which has made a single chirp.” Yes, he had been trying to comfort himself with these suppositions; but he had found all in vain. All in vain; because Death, in approaching him, had stalked with his black shadow before him and enveloped the victim. And it was the mournful influence of the unperceived shadow that caused him to feel—although he neither saw nor heard—to feel the presence of my head within the room.

When I had waited a long time, very patiently, without hearing him lie down, I resolved to open a little—a very, very little crevice in the lantern. So I opened it—you cannot imagine how stealthily, stealthily—until, at length, a single dim ray, like the thread of the spider, shot from out the crevice and full upon the vulture eye.

It was open—wide, wide open—and I grew furious as I gazed upon it. I saw it with perfect distinctness—all a dull blue, with a hideous veil over it that chilled the very marrow in my bones; but I could see nothing else of the old man's face or person, for I had directed the ray, as if by instinct, precisely upon the damned spot.

And now have I not told you that what you mistake for madness is but overacuteness of the senses?—now, I say, there came to my ears a low, dull, quick sound, such as a watch makes when enveloped in cotton. I knew that sound well too. It was the beating of the old man's heart. It increased my fury, as the beating of a drum stimulates the soldier into courage.

But even yet I refrained and kept still. I scarcely breathed. I held the lantern motionless. I tried how steadily I could maintain the ray upon the eye. Meantime the hellish tattoo of the heart increased. It grew quicker and quicker and louder and louder every instant. The old man's terror must have been extreme! It grew louder, I say, louder every moment!—do you mark me well? I have told you that I am nervous: So I am. And now at the dead hour of the night, amid the dreadful silence of that old house, so strange a noise as this excited me to uncontrollable terror. Yet for some minutes longer I refrained and stood still. But the beating grew louder, louder! I thought the heart must burst. And now a new anxiety seized me—the sound would be heard by a neighbor! The old man's hour had come! With a loud yell, I threw open the lantern and leaped into the room. He shrieked once—once only. In an instant I dragged him to the floor and pulled the heavy bed over him. I then smiled refrained (ri·fränd') v.: held back.

5. tattoo n.: steady beat.
gaily to find the deed so far done. But, for many minutes, the heart beat on with a muffled sound. This, however, did not vex me; it would not be heard through the wall. At length it ceased. The old man was dead. I removed the bed and examined the corpse. Yes, he was stone, stone dead. I placed my hand upon the heart and held it there many minutes. There was no pulsation. He was stone dead. His eye would trouble me no more.

If still you think me mad, you will think so no longer when I describe the wise precautions I took for the concealment of the body. The night waned, and I worked hastily but in silence. First of all I dismembered the corpse. I cut off the head and the arms and the legs.

I then took up three planks from the flooring of the chamber and deposited all between the scantlings. I then replaced the boards so cleverly, so cunningly, that no human eye—not even his—could have detected anything wrong. There was nothing to wash out—no stain of any kind—no blood spot whatever. I had been too wary for that. A tub had caught all—ha! ha!

When I had made an end of these labors, it was four o’clock—still dark as midnight. As the bell sounded the hour, there came a knocking at the street door. I went down to open it with a light heart—for what had I now to fear? There entered three men, who introduced themselves, with perfect suavity, as officers of the police. A shriek had been heard by a neighbor during the night; suspicion of foul play had been aroused; information had been lodged at the police office, and they (the officers) had been deputed to search the premises.

6. waned (wänd) v.: gradually drew to a close.
7. scantlings n.: small beams of wood.
8. deputed (dē-pyōt‘id) v.: appointed.
I smiled—for what had I to fear? I bade the gentlemen welcome. The shriek, I said, was my own in a dream. The old man, I mentioned, was absent in the country. I took my visitors all over the house. I bade them search—search well. I led them, at length, to his chamber. I showed them his treasures, secure, undisturbed. In the enthusiasm of my confidence, I brought chairs into the room and desired them here to rest from their fatigues, while I myself, in the wild audacity of my perfect triumph, placed my own seat upon the very spot beneath which reposed the corpse of the victim.

The officers were satisfied. My manner had convinced them. I was singularly at ease. They sat, and while I answered cheerily, they chatted of familiar things. But, ere long, I felt myself getting pale and wished them gone. My head ached, and I fancied a ringing in my ears; but still they sat and still chatted. The ringing became more distinct—it continued and became more distinct: I talked more freely to get rid of the feeling: but it continued and gained definitiveness—until, at length, I found that the noise was not within my ears.

No doubt I now grew very pale—but I talked more fluently and with a heightened voice. Yet the sound increased—and what could I do? It was a low, dull, quick sound—much such a sound as a watch makes when enveloped in cotton. I gasped for breath—and yet the officers heard it not. I talked more quickly—more vehemently; but the noise steadily increased. I arose and argued about trifles, in a high key and with violent gesticulations, but the noise steadily increased. Why would they not be gone? I paced the floor to and fro with heavy strides, as if excited to fury by the observation of the men—but the noise steadily increased. Oh God! what could I do? I foamed—I raved—I swore! I swung the chair upon which I had been sitting and grated it upon the boards, but the noise arose over all and continually increased. It grew louder—louder—louder! And still the men chatted pleasantly, and smiled. Was it possible they heard not? Almighty God!—no, no! They heard!—they suspected!—they knew!—they were making a mockery of my horror!—this I thought, and this I think. But anything was better than this agony! Anything was more tolerable than this derision! I could bear those hypocritical smiles no longer! I felt that I must scream or die!—and now—again!—hark! louder! louder! louder! louder! louder!

“Villains!” I shrieked, “dissemble no more! I admit the deed!—tear up the planks!—here, here!—it is the beating of his hideous heart!”
The Tell-Tale Heart

Narrator Evaluation Chart

The narrator of “The Tell-Tale Heart” claims that he is not mad. Do you agree? Fill out the graphic below by collecting evidence from the story. Focus on the narrator’s thoughts, words, and actions. Then, write whether or not you think the narrator is a reliable source of information.

I believe the narrator is ____________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________
The Tell-Tale Heart

VOCABULARY AND COMPREHENSION

A. Synonyms  Write the word from the Word Bank that best fits each group of synonyms.

1. disturbed, annoyed, troubled
   —__________

2. careful, cautious, leery
   —__________

3. boldness, daring, brazenness
   —__________

4. withheld, repressed, held back
   —__________

5. forcefully, passionately, furiously
   —__________

6. smoothness, politeness, fine manners
   —__________

7. gestures, wild movements, spasms
   —__________

8. scorn, ridicule, contempt
   —__________

9. sharp, sensitive, severe
   —__________

10. intelligence, smarts, good sense
    —__________

Word Bank

acute
vexed
sagacity
refrained wary suavity
audacity
vehemently
gesticulations
derision

B. Reading Comprehension  Answer each question below.

1. Why does the narrator decide to kill the old man?
   —__________

2. Why does the narrator think he is not mad?
   —__________

3. Who arrives at the narrator’s door at night? Why have they come?
   —__________

4. Why does the narrator finally confess to his crime?
   —__________
Possible Answers to Skills Review

Vocabulary and Comprehension (page 169)

A. 1. insatiable
    2. allotted
    3. enthusiasm
    4. reverberated

B. 1. Miep Gies is telling the story.
    2. It is safe for Miep and Henk to visit the Annex only at night, after all the workers have gone home.
    3. The people in the Annex receive news of the outside world through the radio, specifically through a program called Radio Orange.
    4. At the end of the story, Miep finds herself unable to sleep because she finally understands the fear that the inhabitants of the Annex feel.

The Tell-Tale Heart, page 172

Page 174

IDENTIFY
The narrator says he is not “mad.” He intends to prove he’s healthy by showing “how calmly I can tell you the whole story.”

INTERPRET
Possible response: The narrator’s reaction to the old man is strange—the narrator is obsessed with the old man’s eye.

Page 175

EVALUATE
The qualities the narrator mentions that he has, but that insane people don’t have, include “how wisely I proceeded—with what caution—with what foresight—with what dissimulation I went to work.” Opinions will vary. Some students will think these qualities prove his sanity, and some will not.

PREDICT
Predictions will vary. Some students may say that the narrator will kill the old man because the narrator is persistent and patient as well as insane. Other students may say that the narrator is too insane to manage to kill the old man or that it is just too silly to kill a man because you don’t like his eye.

Page 176

IDENTIFY
Possible answer: It is ironic because even as the old man protects himself against robbers from outside, he is about to be robbed of his life by someone inside the house.

Page 177

WORD STUDY
Context clues that hint at the meaning of unperceived: “shadow” (line 87); “caused him to feel” (line 88); and “he neither saw nor heard” (line 88).

EVALUATE
Responses will vary. Some students may think that the weird nature of the painting reflects the weird atmosphere of the story. Other students may be disappointed by the picture, saying it is not how they pictured the story’s scene at all.

Page 178

VISUALIZE
Visual images in lines 90–108 include “a single dim ray, like the thread of the spider”; “It was open—wide, wide open” and “all a dull blue, with a hideous veil over it.”

Sound images include “a low, dull, quick sound, such as a watch makes when enveloped in cotton”; “beating of the old man’s heart”; and “the beating of a drum.”

INTERPRET
Possible response: When he thinks he hears the beating of the old man’s heart, the narrator might be hearing his own heart.

Page 179

RETELL
Possible retelling: The narrator slowly opens the door. The old man moves; the narrator’s thumb slips; the old man calls out; the narrator stays still for an hour. The old man sits up listening; the old man groans in terror; the narrator opens the lantern; a ray falls on the hated eye. The narrator hears the old man’s heart beating louder. He leaps into the room, drags the old man to the floor, and suffocates him with the bed.

INTERPRET
Possible responses: Evidence that the narrator is mad: his decision to kill a man because he doesn’t like his eye; his insistence that he hears the old man’s heart beating louder and louder.
PREDICT
Predictions will vary. Some students may think that the narrator will get away with his crime, but most will probably think his murderous behavior will catch up with him.

Page 181
INFER
The narrator thinks he hears the murdered old man's heartbeat getting louder and louder. Possible responses: The sound he hears is simply in his imagination, or it is his own heartbeat.

INTERPRET
Answers will vary. Possible response: Poe was trying to create an impression of horror or terror.

Possible Answers to Skills Practice

Narrator Evaluation Chart (page 182)

Sane—the narrator's insistence on his sanity; his careful planning; his ability to recount his story
Mad—the narrator's decision to kill the old man whom he loves, because he does not like his eye; the narrator's hearing the old man's heartbeat before and after he kills him; the narrator's increasing agitation

I believe the narrator is (1) a credible source of information because we get the story from him in spite of his madness; or (2) not a credible source of information because he is too emotionally disturbed to tell us what really happened.

Possible Answers to Skills Review

Vocabulary and Comprehension (page 183)

A. 1. vexed
   2. wary
   3. audacity
   4. refrained
   5. vehemently
   6. suavity
   7. gesticulations
   8. derision
   9. acute
   10. sagacity

B. 1. The narrator decides to kill the old man because the narrator hates the old man's eye.
   2. The narrator does not think he is mad because he is able to recount his whole story and because he was able to carefully plan the murder.
   3. Police officers arrive at the narrator's door at night. They have come because a neighbor heard a scream and reported it to the police.
   4. The narrator finally confesses to his crime because he can't stand the sound of the old man's heartbeat.

Raymond's Run, page 184

IDENTIFY
The narrator's main responsibility in life is to look after Raymond. Students find out in lines 5–6: “All I have to do in life is mind my brother Raymond, which is enough.”

IDENTIFY
Words and phrases in lines 7–20 that are dialect: “any fool can see” (line 8); “a lot of smart mouths got lots to say” (lines 10–11); “was minding him” (line 12); “play the dozens” (line 14); “in my face” (line 15).

IDENTIFY
Squeaky is telling the story.

IDENTIFY
Squeaky thinks she's going to beat Gretchen this year because Gretchen has “short legs” and “freckles.” In addition, Squeaky says, “No one can beat me and that's all there is to it.”

INFER
Students can infer that success does not come easily for Squeaky, but she is willing to work hard to become successful.

MAKE A JUDGMENT
At first, Squeaky thinks about getting out of the girls' way and letting them pass. Then Squeaky wonders if she should walk right past them. Finally, she thinks about fighting them. Responses will vary as to the best plan. Many students will probably think just letting the girls pass is the best plan.